Q: Bash script error: Variable not set when within a function? In a bash script I've defined a function called myFunction that contains a variable $error. I'm calling this function from within the script with an echo statement, and I'm getting an error saying that $error is not set. Why is this? Example: `#!/bin/bash myFunction() { echo "varA=$varA" echo "varB=$varB" echo "$error" } myFunction $sh myscript.sh myFunction: line 2: varA=filepath:/var/log/tomcat6/catalina.log: No such file or directory myFunction: line 3: varB=deployed/tmp/app.log: No such file or directory error: empty string A: You need to assign the variable in the function body: #!/bin/bash myFunction() { varA=$varA varB=$varB echo "$error" } myFunction ABC's Once Upon a Time and The Tomorrow People are making room for two new comings this fall, and we have your first official casting breakdown! TVLine has learned that the next major new additions to the worlds of Once Upon a Time and The Tomorrow People are Beverly Hills, 90210's Jeremy Jordan and The Vampire Diaries' Joseph Morgan! Based on the characters created by Jack Kirby, Jeremy Jordan will play Rumpelstiltskin, a man with many faces, who's secretly the trickster and the King of Storybrooke. Meanwhile, Joseph Morgan will play Gideon the archer, who rose to power by defeating the evil Dark Archer with a magical bow.
