In their study on the effect of p53 on cell death in human fibroblasts, it was shown that p53 led to enhanced cell survival through the modulation of autophagy \[@pone.0194557.ref044]. We showed that knockdown of ATG7 in the presence of p53 partially rescued the cell death induced by iAs<sup>III</sup>, which confirmed the role of autophagy in iAs<sup>III</sup>-induced cell death. The partial rescue of ATG7 knockdown was also observed when p53 knockdown was combined with iAs<sup>III</sup>, which indicates a relationship between p53 and autophagy in iAs<sup>III</sup>-induced cell death. A similar relationship has also been demonstrated for cadmium, where autophagy was activated after loss of p53 and a caspase-independent cell death was observed. Although p53 could activate cell death at the late stage of cadmium-induced apoptosis, 2d92ce491b
