Stratified cognitive-behavioral therapy for alcohol use disorders in patients with anxiety disorders: a randomized controlled trial. Patients with comorbid alcohol use disorders (AUDs) and anxiety disorders (ADs) are known to receive limited psychological treatment. This randomized controlled trial (RCT) compared the efficacy of a modified cognitive-behavioral therapy (CBT) for reducing AUDs to a waitlist control group. Participants with comorbid AUDs and ADs were randomly assigned to receive either 16 sessions of stratified CBT for comorbid AUDs and ADs or treatment as usual (TAU) (active control condition). Participants were assessed at baseline, 8 weeks, 16 weeks, and 52 weeks after randomization. The primary outcome was AUDs at 16 weeks and 52 weeks. Participants who had received CBT had significantly more days abstinent during weeks 1 to 16 compared with TAU (P .

I'm anxious about our next appointment with the oncologist as he is putting us at high risk for more chemotherapy. I need to find a job, a stable place to live, and support for my family. I'm happy to be married, and have so much gratitude for being able to find this wonderful man. However, I'm finding it harder and harder to appreciate my marriage and marriage relationship, and there is a sadness there that I'm not sure how to express. I'm not a perfect person, and I don't have everything together. I don't want to make anybody feel bad about any of this, but 2d92ce491b
